Editorial

It is with great pleasure that we present the September 2025 edition of Aureole, the multidisciplinary peer-reviewed journal published by the Research Cell of St. Stephen's College, Uzhavoor. True to our vision of fostering academic inquiry across diverse domains, this issue brings together a collection of thought-provoking articles that engage with some of the most pressing questions of our times.

The present volume foregrounds critical discussions on eco-cultural futures, gender, and the environment, offering fresh perspectives that bridge disciplinary boundaries. In an era marked by ecological uncertainty and social transformation, these contributions remind us of the need to rethink development, identity, and sustainability through an integrative lens. The authors featured here draw on a range of methodologies and theoretical frameworks, enriching our collective understanding of how culture, society, and nature remain deeply intertwined.

As always, Aureole remains committed to upholding rigorous standards of research while providing a platform for innovative scholarship. We are grateful to our contributors for their scholarly engagement, to our reviewers for their meticulous evaluations, and to our readers for their continued support.

We trust that this edition will stimulate meaningful dialogue and inspire further academic exploration.
